

Nebuchadnezzar was a very bossy king.
He lived in a place called Babylon.
He liked to make rules.
Everyone in his kingdom had to obey him.

One day he made an important rule.
“Everyone must bow down and pray to a big gold statue I have made.
It will be your God,” said the king.

Three men would NOT bow
to the big gold statue.
“We bow and pray ONLY to God,”
they said, “not to a statue a man has made.”

The king was VERY angry.

He made another rule.

“These men must be thrown into a fire,” he said.

“Make a VERY hot fire and they will change their mind.”

The soldiers made a VERY hot fire.
The three men prayed and they asked God to help them.
They would not bow down to statues.

The king's soldiers threw the men into the fire.
It was very hot but it didn't burn them!
God was looking after them!
Not even their clothes got burnt!

The King looked into the fire and saw God's angel looking after the men.
He knew a statue could never do that.
Then the King believed in God.

The King made a new rule.
“The three men were right and I was wrong.
Everyone in my kingdom must pray
to God and not to statues,” he said.
